PETABYTE DATA COLLECTION
AND PROCESSING

High energy physics experiments collect massive amounts of data. A detector measures hundreds of thousands of potential pieces of information for each collision of particles. Some experiments require millions of collisions per second. The online and trigger systems select the “best” events, and save the information for further processing and analysis.